

Is your child prepared for lifelong learning?

Our global marketplace is rapidly evolving and changing its boundaries. Today more than ever people must be creative, intelligent, flexible, and capable in many diverse skills to be truly successful in life and work. If you have small children this is actually great news. You are in a position to start preparing them now.

What about music?

You have probably heard that musical experience is a crucial component to lifelong learning. Music develops creativity, teamwork, sensitivity to beauty, and capacity for love. You may not realize it, but making music is one of the most complex pursuits undertaken by humans, coordinating more parts of the brain and soul than practically any other human endeavor. The benefits of musical study are well-documented and essential to any growing human who hopes to be successful: <http://www.childrensmusicworkshop.com/advocacy/12benefits.html>

The Prairie Oaks School of Music is here to help

At the Prairie Oaks School of Music we take your child's future success seriously. We use music as a means to teach the person and not just the skill. Our dedicated and accomplished instructors understand how musical study works to benefit the whole person and how musicianship transforms people into compassionate, confident citizens of the world eager to give their best to all tasks they undertake and to all people with whom they relate.

The miracle of the Suzuki method

If you have suspected your son or daughter is too young for serious musical study you are not alone. We are excited to inform you, however, that your child's age makes him or her a prime candidate for the world-renowned Suzuki method of music instruction. It is one of the only methods of musical instruction that prizes, even necessitates, starting young students on the extraordinary journey of musical mastery. The Suzuki method has been applied throughout the world with astounding results every time. Suzuki is successful for many reasons, and we invite you to investigate it further: <http://suzukiassociation.org/>
